

To Kill a Mockingbird

Journey with us to the American Midwest in the depression years to see a taut court room drama. A small-town lawyer, Atticus Finch, defends the indefensible, a black youth accused of raping a white girl. Set against the tensions and values of the time, will Atticus succeed?

Harper Lee's classic of American literature made famous by the 1960's film starring Gregory Peck, here revised for the stage.

Including a twenty-minute break, the running time for this production is a total of two hours fifty minutes and it addresses serious issues.

The cost will be £44 per ticket to include seat and travel. Booking forms will be on the website from 22nd August. This is a long lead time, but it is only by booking now that we can get the seats we need at a reasonable cost. It will at least give us something to look forward to over the winter!
